

Truth to be told, I never see myself as a teacher. But throughout a rough and challenging journey with this course, I discovered tons of things that changed my mind about teaching. How do I see myself as a teacher? That is a tough question and I am just about to start my teaching practical in July. For me, to answer that question now is quite irrelevant because I do not have a solid teaching in real classroom situation experiences yet. But, I think I have the ideas of what kind of teacher I want to be.

I believe I can see myself as a growing teacher that takes baby steps to be a good yet inspiring teacher that always eager to learn new things. I love discovering teaching strategies or approaches on how to deliver teaching input in simple, effective but impactful to the students. I want to know the techniques that can be used to encourage students' participation to communicate, be creative and embolden their critical thinking in classroom activities. In short, I want to be a never stop learning kind of teacher and always eager to share my knowledge with the students.

Apart from that, I love getting feedbacks from my friends and lecturer about my teaching. Accepting constructive feedbacks is important because it shows what you are lacking of, what aspects you can improve and even allowing a positive discussion on how to improve each other's teaching methods. Since I am a growth mind-set person, I would like to know other's opinion about my words, actions and decisions. From that, I will take it as a challenge to change myself to be a better teacher not just for myself, but for the students too. I think I can see myself as a teacher that always ready to accept fruitful criticism so that I can be a virtuous reflective practitioner.

In conclusion, this KPD3026 journey really ignites my inner self to become a dynamic teacher and ready to make changes within students-self. Furthermore, it also helps me to reshape my beliefs about teacher profession and make me to become more open-minded and willing to accept criticism. It truly such a miraculous experience that leaves remarkable lessons for me to explore more about teaching world. Here is to go for teaching practical!
